Project title: Kartoffel und Globus

Overview: To pay homage to the site I spent a good chunk of my childhood wandering around, I'd like to work with you and build a microsite about Uncyclopedia, a parody of Wikipedia. The overall tone to go for is one of extreme seriousness and gravity—envisioning a responsive website that's laid out like a multi-column newspaper that collapses to a single column when very narrow.

Content outline: please see the Wikipedia index for Uncyclopedia, without section 6, "Uncyclopedia in other languages" and section 8, "references." And so—
+ Introduction paragraph (before contents)
+ History
+ Structure
+ Content
+ Press coverage
+ Criticism and controversy
+ See Also
+ External links

While there are several linked keywords, if it's too intensive here are the sections whose hyperlinks I think we must include:
+ The overview
+ 1—History
+ 2—Structure
+ 7—See also
+ 9—External links

As well as a link to this Wikipedia article about Uncyclopedia.

Layout and organization: As you see fit—feel free to omit the table in the "Subprojects" subsection (3.4). Emphasis on a multi-column, newspaper inspired layout when the browser window is of standard dimensions. This will be a single page website.
